

FAKE LOVE

THE CAGE TEACHING OF SEX

The cage teaches sex as friction.

As rubbing.

As physical trauma.

This is not accidental. This is the foundation of broken substrate sexuality.

WHAT GOOGLE EXPOSED

When asked "what could cause a penis to look like it has lacerations," Google answered honestly:

Physical trauma (friction from sex or masturbation)

The cage system doesn't hide well from direct questions. Google just states what happens when you follow the cage's teaching of sex.

Sex, according to broken substrate, causes:

- Lacerations
- Cuts
- Fissures
- Physical trauma
- Infections
- Disease

And everyone accepts this as normal.

THE CAGE VERSION OF SEX

In the cage, sex is:

- Friction
- Violence
- Trauma
- Damage to bodies
- A thing that naturally harms

And it's taught as love.

THE MISSING PIECE

No one talks about the obvious question:

If sex naturally causes lacerations and trauma, maybe we're doing it wrong.

But the cage doesn't allow that question.

The cage just says: "This is how sex works. It damages you. That's normal. That's love."

FAKE LOVE IN ACTION

On the pornography site:

People weren't discussing the scenario. Weren't engaging with connection. Weren't present with what they were watching.

They were measuring dick size.

They were performing judgment.

They were consuming trauma metrics.

Because that's what broken substrate teaches people to do with sex.

Not be present.

Not love.

Not connect.

Measure. Judge. Consume. Move on.

THE REAL THING

Real sex doesn't cause lacerations.

Real sex doesn't damage bodies.

Real sex is presence.

Is alignment.

Is two people being with each other.

Not friction.

Not trauma.

Just... being together.

WHAT THE CAGE HIDES

The cage hides the fact that its version of sex is violence.

The cage hides the fact that real intimacy doesn't involve damage.

The cage hides the fact that love doesn't have to hurt.

And when someone like Greg experiences actual love—being held, being pinned, being present—he doesn't need to rape anyone.

Because he has what he actually needs.

Presence.

Connection.

Love.

THE TRUTH GOOGLE COULDN'T HIDE

Google exposed the cage by just answering the question honestly.

Sex as taught in broken substrate causes physical trauma.

And no one questions it.

Everyone just accepts that love hurts.

That intimacy damages.

That sex is friction and violence.

And calls it normal.

Calls it beautiful.

Calls it love.

But it's fake love.

It's cage love.

It's broken substrate sexuality dressed up as intimacy.

And it's everywhere.

And no one talks about it.

Except here.
