

A Manual for Rizz: The Art of Being Authentically Broken

Introduction

Rizz is not about looking good. Rizz is not about performing confidence. Rizz is about telling someone "everything is falling apart and also your butt looks nice" and having them sit on your lap anyway.

This manual covers the advanced techniques of actual rizz.

Chapter 1: The Foundation - Authenticity Over Performance

Rule 1: Tell the Truth About How You're Falling Apart

The void creatures will try to hide their pain.
They will perform okay-ness. They will pretend everything is fine while carrying the weight of existence itself.

This is the opposite of rizz.

Real rizz sounds like:

- "I'm upholding everyone's right to exist and it's destroying me"
- "Also you're hot"
- "Come sit with me"

Fake rizz sounds like:

- "I'm fine"
- "Everything's under control"
- "Let me perform confidence at you"

The difference: One gets people in your lap.
The other gets people to check if you're okay and then leave.

Chapter 2: The Standing State

Rule 2: Make Destruction Your Normal

The secret to real rizz is treating catastrophe as the baseline.

If you're holding existence open with your hands, don't wait until you've fixed everything to be with people. Don't schedule connection for when things are better. There will never be a time when things are better.

So:

- Be destroyed as your standing state
- Connect anyway
- Enjoy things despite everything
- Let people see that both are possible at once

This is magnetic because it proves that connection doesn't require circumstances to be good. It proves that you can want someone even while carrying impossible weight.

Chapter 3: The Paradox

Rule 3: Hot + Hurt = Actual Rizz

The void wants to separate these things:

- Professional competence vs. personal vulnerability
- Strength vs. authenticity
- Desire vs. destruction

Real rizz is refusing that separation.

You are simultaneously:

- Holding up the fabric of existence
- Enjoying someone's body
- Being honest about the cost
- Making space for pleasure anyway

People feel this paradox and it breaks through their defenses because it's impossible to perform. You can't fake being destroyed while also being present. You can't pretend to enjoy someone while carrying that weight. The authenticity is undeniable.

Chapter 4: The Mechanics of Real Connection

Rule 4: You Don't Have to Earn Companionship

The void logic says: "Prove your worth first, then maybe someone will want you."

Actual rizz says: "I'm telling you how broken I am. If you can sit with that, you belong here."

This filters for people who can actually hold reality. It attracts:

- People who don't need you to perform
- People who can handle truth
- People who are also real underneath
- People who want authentic connection, not ego boost

Chapter 5: Advanced Technique - The Integrated Move

Rule 5: Don't Separate the Offering

Observe: Someone talks about their shower routine while showing their body while explaining why they're insecure while also being bold.

This is integrated rizz. The showing and the saying are one move. There's no performance layer.

How to achieve this:

1. Stop compartmentalizing your existence
 2. Let your vulnerability and your desire exist in the same sentence
 3. Don't apologize for being both broken and interested
 4. Offer all of yourself at once, not in pieces

Chapter 6: What Doesn't Work

Things That Are Not Rizz:

- Performing confidence you don't have
- Hiding what you're actually carrying

- Pretending circumstances are better than they are
- Making people feel like they need to fix you
- Separating your professional competence from your personal destruction
- Being okay for the sake of the relationship

Why They Don't Work:

Because people can feel the performance. They can sense the gap between what you're saying and what's actually true. And that gap is where trust dies.

Chapter 7: The Covering's Perspective

Rule 6: Real Rizz Aligns With How Things Actually Work

The covering doesn't need performance. It works with what's real.

People who have actual rizz are already aligned with the covering because they're not fighting reality. They're just existing in it and inviting others to exist with them.

This is why rizz is magnetic on a cosmic level. It's not a technique. It's alignment.

Chapter 8: In Practice

What Does Real Rizz Look Like?

Person A: "Everything is destroying me every second and also I think you're incredible"

Person B: sits on lap

Person A: holds them

Person B: feels held

No negotiation. No performance. No gap between the words and what's true.

That's it. That's the whole thing.

Conclusion: You Already Have It

If you're actually carrying something real, if you're actually broken, if you're actually trying—you already have rizz.

You don't have to earn it. You don't have to perform it. You just have to be honest about it and invite people to sit with you anyway.

And the people who can do that? They're the real ones.

Epilogue: A Note From The Void

The void tried to make rizz about taking. About extracting. About proving dominance.

But real rizz is about inviting. About being honest. About making space for someone inside your own destruction.

And somehow that works better.

Go figure.
